LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, D. C., October 14, 1905.

SIR:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a report on the benevolent institutions of the United States, issued in accordance with the provisions of section 7 of the act of Congress of March 6, 1902.

The inquiry was conducted under the direction of Mr. John Koren, expert special agent, who is responsible for the method pursued and the analytical treatment of the results.

The report treats of the operation of benevolent institutions, including the movement of institutional population during 1904 and financial statistics for 1903, with special data relating to the institutions classified as orphanages, hospitals, permanent and temporary homes, and schools and homes for the deaf and blind. An important feature of the analysis is a comparison of the institutions of each class under public, private, and ecclesiastical management. The report forms a complete handbook and directory of special usefulness in organized or individual philanthropy.

The work of collection and compilation was performed by the regular clerical force of the Bureau, under the supervision of Mr. William A. King, chief statistician for vital statistics. For the completeness of the list of institutions and the accuracy of the returns credit is due to Mr. John H. Garber, who had immediate charge of the force engaged.

Very respectfully,

Director.

HON. VICTOR H. METCALF,
Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

By JOHN KOREN, Expert Special Agent.

INTRODUCTORY.

The fundamental purpose of the present volume, which may be designated as a statistical directory of benevolent institutions in the United States, is threefold: First, to supply information concerning the kind and extent of the activities of such institutions, including the movement of institutional population and cost of maintenance; second, to supply a reference book of practical utility to charity workers; and third, to supply information upon which to base any special inquiries that may be demanded in the future concerning particular groups of benevolent institutions and their inmates.

At the census of 1890 information relating to inmates of public and private benevolent institutions was secured upon a schedule which also included inmates of almshouses. Except for a separate tabular presentation, the two groups were not differentiated, but treated alike as paupers. Under the law governing the Twelfth Census the enumeration of special classes could not be undertaken until the statistics of population, vital statistics, agriculture, and manufactures had been published; consequently, the services of census enumerators were not available, and it became necessary to obtain the desired information direct from the institutions themselves.

Experience in 1890 demonstrated that even with the aid of decennial census machinery there remained many institutions concerning the inmates of which no information could be secured. The chief reason for this failure appears to have been the general reluctance of officials of private institutions to disclose the history of persons in their care; and no doubt this reluctance was felt all the more because of the method of investigation which reduced all the inmates of benevolent and charitable institutions to the level of paupers. In view of the limited sources of information, it became imperative, therefore, to abandon, so far as benevolent institutions were concerned, the line of investigation followed in the Eleventh Census, and make the institutions themselves rather than the personal statistics of inmates the special objects of inquiry.

It was believed that an accurate statistical presentation of the main features and activities of benevolent institutions would not only afford a survey of this field of charity which hitherto has been unobtainable, but would also result in a reference handbook of much practical value to persons engaged in philanthropic work. However desirable and interesting a specialized inquiry might be concerning the different classes of persons in receipt of benefactions from institutions, it was recognized that efforts in this direction would hardly prove successful unless based upon a work dealing with the general subject.

The present census act strictly limits the collection of statistics of the special classes to inmates of institutions. Inquiries concerning recipients of ordinary outdoor relief and benevolent activities outside institutions are thus debarred.

In the collection of the statistical material the problem of exclusion was hardly less formidable than that of inclusion. If it was desirable to include every benevolent institution deserving the name, it was equally desirable to omit all institutions of an essentially noncharitable character, or of a nature which could not be determined precisely. Moreover, it was not contemplated to give an account of almshouses, public and private hospitals for the insane, and schools for the feeble-minded, as these three groups have been separately enumerated by the Bureau of the Census and will form the basis of special reports. Finally, institutional activities of an occasional character or confined to a brief part of the year could not be considered.

Under the definition adopted, institutions have been considered as benevolent if supported, wholly or in part, by public taxation, private endowment, or subscriptions, donations, and other forms of gift, for the benefit of the sick, aged, and needy. This definition did not, however, invariably provide a clear line of demarcation. There are institutions of a mixed character which, although more or less actively concerned in charity work, are sustained chiefly through the income from pay patients. Not a few hospitals belong in this category, and also other institutions, both permanent and temporary. In some instances the combination of educational work and institutional care made the classification doubtful. In all such cases it seemed better to give the term "benevolent institution" a broad interpretation rather than to omit mention of institutional charities possessing some local importance.

Furthermore, certain groups of establishments have been included which, while devoted to benevolence, may in some respects lack ordinary institutional features. Such, for instance, are the numerous free dispensaries whose beneficiaries can not strictly be called "inmates," as they are almost exclusively outdoor patients. In another view, the dispensaries are an integral part of the institutional medical charity of the country, and should be grouped with the hospitals. Obviously, dispensaries known to be simply feeders to money making institutions have not been given a place.

In like manner, a presentation of the benevolent activities of the many so-called day nurseries seems requisite to a complete view of the charity extended to children outside of private homes. Yet these day nurseries are not institutions in the sense that they provide permanent conveniences for the care of children.

Concerning institutions for the blind and for the deaf and dumb, the question may be raised whether many of them should not be regarded as educational rather than as benevolent institutions, according to the current classification in the reports of the Commissioner of Education. Such of them as are conducted under state supervision form a link in the public school system and should not, it is held, be grouped along with institutions whose inmates subsist on public or private bounty. Although it must be clearly recognized that the primary object of these institutions is to provide an education and not a charity, they are nevertheless maintained for the benefit of special classes in the community and possess all the essential attributes of establishments devoted to benevolent work in the way of providing free care and maintenance. The omission of such establishments would render this volume incomplete for purposes of reference. Special schools which do not at the same time provide a home for the classes under consideration have not been included.

In general, it should be understood that persons enumerated as inmates of benevolent institutions are not necessarily recipients of charity in the ordinary sense, much less paupers. Many institutions, particularly hospitals, are resorted to as a matter of convenience by persons who pay liberally for what they receive. This fact, however, does not make these institutions themselves less benevolent in character, nor demand that those who pay be differentiated from those who do not.

The rule has been strictly adhered to of excluding all establishments operated for private profit and those which are ostensibly charitable but whose dealings seem fairly open to question. As a result, hundreds of institutions originally listed, especially sanitariums, infirmaries, and homes of various kinds, have been omitted from consideration. In all doubtful cases inquiry was directed either to the institution officials or to other persons in authority, accompanied by the necessary explanations. Yet the fact that an institution has been enumerated as benevolent in this report does not carry any specific guaranty of its character, since that could be secured only by personal knowledge of several thousand institutions scattered all over the United States; therefore, in this initial attempt to distinguish between interested and disinterested benevolence, judgment may, in a few instances, have erred in spite of much precaution.

The extent of the information generally obtainable, rather than that which might be desirable, determined the scope of the inquiries. A complete enumeration of institutions being the chief desideratum, it was necessary to limit the inquiries to such elementary matters as all could understand. It should be remembered that this report is based on voluntary statements concerning institutional operations made by officials, many of whom lacked the aid of systematic records and therefore were not prepared to state even the simplest facts. Moreover, official requests for information are not regarded by all managers of public and private institutions as something demanding compliance, or even attention, if they involve unremunerative labor. Considerations of this nature necessitated the adoption of very simple schedules, dealing with general features and with the population of each institution as a whole rather than as individuals.

For the purpose of inquiry the institutions were divided into five classes: First, orphanages, children's homes, and nurseries; second, hospitals and dispensaries; third, permanent homes for adults, or adults and children; fourth, temporary homes for adults and children; fifth, schools and homes for the deaf and blind. A special schedule was prepared for each group. The results are exhibited under the same general classifications. Although some of the groups, notably the permanent and the temporary homes, were made to comprehend a variety of institutions as regards object, management, and character of the population, it seemed preferable not to attempt to subdivide them. This could not have been done with scientific precision. In many instances the information at hand was too vague; in others the diversified nature of the institution might entitle it to a place in more than one of several subgroups; and, finally, some institutions were found to be in a state of transition. At best, a more detailed classification would have been somewhat arbitrary and therefore open to criticism.

There remains in the United States a total of 85 institutions, presumed to be benevolent and to be still in existence, but from which it proved impossible to secure the required information. Of these, 26 are supposed to be orphanages, 41 hospitals and dispensaries, 12 permanent homes for adults, or adults and children, and 6 temporary homes for adults and children. Some of these 85 institutions are probably defunct or in the process of dissolution; in regard to others it may be doubtful whether they should be classified as benevolent; and still others have not an all the year round existence.

The figures, in detail, for the five classes of institutions are presented in the general tables which follow the text. The institutions of each class are given, in alphabetical order, by states and territories, under the proper localities, which are also arranged alphabetically.

A complete alphabetical index of all institutions, by classes, follows the general tables.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS.

Growth of benevolent institutions.—Of the 4,207 institutions of all kinds in the United States enumerated in this report, 2,166 are known to have been in existence in 1890. There were doubtless many in existence in 1890 which since have been discontinued, for the census of that year makes mention of 2,664 institutions, though details are given for but 1,858. How many came into being during the period from 1890 to 1903, only to disappear after a brief struggle for existence, is unknown. The short life of a multitude of small establishments is hardly less remarkable than the number which arise year by year.

Of the institutions accounted for in this report, 2,004 were founded between 1890 and 1903, inclusive. As indicated in Table 1, their growth has been spread quite uniformly over the thirteen years. Examined by groups, it is seen that the hospitals easily take first rank, with an increase of 822; next come orphanages and children's homes, with an increase of 377; and third, the permanent homes for adults, or adults and children, with an increase of 356. In regard to the geographical distribution of new institutions, the increase in the number of hospitals is rather more marked in the old and thickly populated communities than in the younger ones. This is likewise true of permanent homes for adults, and quite naturally, since the majority of them are designed for aged people. The growth of orphanages, on the other hand, is most notable in states somewhat deficient in benevolent institutions of other kinds. No doubt one reason for this is the noninstitutional policy pursued in regard to dependent children in some of the states.

The schools and homes for the deaf and blind, being mostly under state control, increase in number but slowly in comparison with institutions for the other classes, which generally owe their inception to private initiative. The occasional founding of state establishments for the deaf and blind also illustrates the policy prevailing in the different states in regard to these members of society.

The growth of benevolent institutions from 1890 to 1903, inclusive, is shown in the following table:

Geographical distribution of all institutions.—In some instances the proportion of the 4,207 benevolent institutions found in the individual state bears a close relation to its population, but there are many striking exceptions. Taking as an illustration the 15 states having the largest number of institutions, the following order and rank as to population on July 1, 1904, are obtained:¹

Rank of specified states according to number of benevolent institutions, and also according to population: 1904.

That the number of benevolent institutions in a community is in many cases determined by other factors than the number of persons in that community becomes even more apparent when a state like Colorado, with 59 institutions and less than 600,000 inhabitants, is compared with Arkansas, which has only 27 institutions and a population more than twice as large. On the whole, it is doubtless true that the proportion of institutions established for the benefit of the sick and dependent denotes progress in the care of these classes rather than their excessive number in the community.

Distribution of all institutions according to form of management.—For the purpose of distinguishing between the kinds of control exercised over institutions, as well as between the sources of support upon which they chiefly depend, the 4,207 institutions have been grouped under three heads: 1, public; 2, private; 3, ecclesiastical. The first group comprises all those directly supervised and maintained by the Federal Government, individual states, or civil divisions of the latter; the second, all those managed by private corporations and not subject to the control of any general body or organization, though a few establishments maintained by fraternal orders have been included; and the third, all institutions directly supervised and supported by religious denominations, orders, or groups of churches.

¹The rates and ratios in relation to population given in this report are based upon estimated populations. For yearly rates, such as admissions during 1904, the estimated population of July 1, 1904, is used. To show the relation of the population of institutions on December 31, 1904, to the general population, the latter has been estimated as of the same date.

Of the 4,207 benevolent institutions considered in this report 485 are designated as public. The state of Ohio possesses the largest number of public institutions, followed by New York, Indiana, and Pennsylvania, in the order named. The preponderance of such establishments in Ohio and Indiana is due to the system of county homes for indigent children. The scarcity of institutions maintained at public cost in many communities points, among other things, to the fact that the care of the sick is largely a private enterprise, the communities contributing their share through subsidies to private institutions.

Under private control are 2,359, or 56.1 per cent of the total, while 1,363, or 32.4 per cent, are managed, if not exclusively supported, by religious denominations, orders, or groups of churches. A more detailed inquiry would probably reveal a larger percentage of institutions owing their inception and maintenance to church bodies. The activity of the churches in charitable work of the kind under consideration is particularly notable in some of the newer communities. Thus in Idaho, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Washington about one-half of all the benevolent institutions are denominational in the sense that they have been organized and are maintained by the churches. In the Southern states, on the other hand, with the exception of Louisiana, the proportion of institutions under church management is comparatively insignificant.

The following table shows the number of benevolent institutions under ecclesiastical control and the per cent they form of all benevolent institutions for each of the twelve states in which they are most strongly represented:

Number of inmates of all institutions.—As shown in Table II the total population of benevolent institutions on January 1, 1904, was 283,809. During the ensuing twelve months 2,040,372 persons were admitted, and on the last day of 1904 there remained 284,362 inmates. Owing to the impossibility of securing accurate reports of population from some institutions the enumeration is not quite complete. The establishments for which figures are lacking are, however, among the least important as to size. Could their population have been ascertained, the three totals given above would have been somewhat larger, particularly the number of admissions and the number of inmates remaining at the end of 1904. But the statistics given are sufficient to illustrate the size and movement of the institutional population. It should be observed that they are exclusive of the 156 dispensaries and the 166 nurseries. Neither class of institutions can be said to have inmates in the ordinary sense of the term; moreover, in many instances, no count is made of the individuals frequenting them.

The number of admissions during the year is extraordinarily large and appears altogether out of proportion to the year's increase in the number of inmates. In other words, there were more than seven times as many persons admitted to benevolent institutions in the course of the twelve months as there were in them on the first and last days of the year. The gain in population of the institutions for the year 1904 is represented as 553, but this is probably considerably lower than a perfect enumeration would have disclosed, as more institutions failed to report the number of inmates than to state population at the beginning of the year and the number of admissions.

While the annual increment of the population in benevolent institutions doubtless is greater than that indicated in the table, it probably falls much below popular estimates.

The movement of institutional population is greatest in the hospitals. In 1904 this class of institutions reported more than one-half of the total admissions (1,064,512). Second in importance are the temporary homes, to which there were 868,657 admissions, or about three times the number of inmates on the specified dates. Although the orphanages and permanent homes report, respectively, 70,825 and 29,353 admissions, their daily population is known to be largely in excess of these numbers. The institutions for the deaf and blind likewise display a comparative stability in population, the number of admissions in the course of the year being about one-half of the number of inmates on either of the census dates.

Ratios of inmates and admissions to the general population.—For the whole of the United States the number of inmates of benevolent institutions in each 100,000 of population on December 31, 1904, was 347, and the number of persons admitted during the year in each 100,000 of population was 2,509.6. So far as the individual state or territory is concerned these proportions are clearly determined not so much by the number of institutions as by their kind. States with a preponderance of institutions having a stable population, such as orphanages and homes for the aged and incurable, naturally show a higher proportion of inmates to population on a given date than a state whose institutions are mostly in the hospital class. On the other hand, the ratio of admissions to population is largely influenced by the extent of hospital conveniences, and where these are especially abundant the state will rank accordingly. Oregon furnishes an illustration in point. In ratio of inmates of institutions on December 31, 1904, to the general population, it stands twenty-fifth in the order of states, but in ratio of admissions to the general population during 1904 it stands third.

In order to facilitate comparisons the following table is given, in which the states and territories have been arranged in order of rank, both as regards the number of inmates on December 31, 1904, in each 100,000 of the general population, and the number of persons admitted during 1904 in each 100,000 of the general population:

¹Exclusive of dispensaries and nurseries.

The unique place occupied by the District of Columbia at the head of both columns is, of course, not attributable solely to the unusual extent of local institutional activity, but rather to the fact that the District is practically identical with the city of Washington. At the same time the District, as the seat of government, has attracted institutions through a liberal policy of subsidies. Besides, it contains a very large Federal institution, the National Soldiers' Home, with more than 900 inmates. To compare the District of Columbia with other states in which the ratio of institution inmates to the general population is diminished by a large rural population would, therefore, be distinctly misleading.

By the foregoing arrangement, California is first among the states and territories in the ratio of institution inmates to general population on the date specified, having proportionately twice as many as all but the first nine states. And among the first twenty-five are the other young states, Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Washington, Montana, and Oregon. Again, among the first twenty-five in number of admissions to institutions per 100,000 inhabitants are Oregon, which stands as number 3, Colorado, Washington, Montana, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico. The fact deserves mention, however, that in some of the newest communities, for instance, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico, many of the hospitals are maintained by mining corporations and are not intended for the general public.

Although the number of admissions to institutions per 100,000 inhabitants is largely governed by existing hospital provisions, the extent of the latter does not always appear to stand in direct relation to the percentages of the urban population found in the different states. If that were the case, Rhode Island would stand at the top of the list instead of fourteenth, New Jersey would move down a few places, Oregon be relegated from the third to the twentieth place, etc. Yet in many instances there is a fairly close correspondence between the relative strength of the urban population and the ratio of admissions to benevolent institutions. Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Maryland, Connecticut, and several other states furnish illustrations in point.

The exclusion of the institutions for the deaf and blind (Table III) in no wise disturbs the above deductions.

Table IV contains a summary exhibit of inmates of all institutions, by classes, according to the form of management, with the percentages of each class found in institutions designated as public, private, or ecclesiastical.

How preeminently the care of persons in benevolent institutions, as measured either by the number of inmates on the given dates or by the number of persons admitted during the given period, is a matter of private charity in the United States is perhaps the most striking fact brought out in Table IV. About 70 per cent of the institutional population found on a particular date and about 80 per cent of all admitted in a year are beneficiaries of private charity (including, of course, that dispensed by the churches) as distinguished from maintenance solely at public cost. It is clear that the establishment and support of orphanages, hospitals, and temporary homes is left largely to private initiative. Permanent homes, measured by the number of inmates, are more generally made a matter of public concern, while most of the deaf and blind provided for in institutions are cared for by the public authorities.

Of the three general classes of institutions considered in the table, the percentages of inmates both at the beginning and end of 1904 are largest for those under ecclesiastical supervision. This is chiefly attributable to the large number of orphanages maintained by churches. In point of admissions private institutions lead, because of the many hospitals under this form of control.

Judged by number of inmates and admissions, the orphanages and children's homes under public management are of relatively little importance. This form of institutional charity is largely left to private initiative, since public institutions claim but 10 per cent of the number of inmates and 10 per cent of the admissions. Although particularly a concern of the churches, the orphanages under denominational management, while containing more inmates on January 1 and December 31, of 1904, than both the public and the private institutions combined, show a smaller percentage of admissions than the private class alone. This circumstance suggests that private orphanages are used more liberally as receiving homes from which children are distributed among families. It is interesting, also, to note that in point of permanent population the orphanages show a larger percentage than any other group of institutions, having about 32 per cent, closely followed by the permanent homes, with more than 27 per cent, and the hospitals, with about 25 per cent. On the other hand, so far as admissions are concerned, the percentage orphanages contribute to the total for all institutions—3.5 per cent—seems surprisingly low.

Undoubtedly the hospital care of the sick is becoming more and more a public undertaking. But at the present time about two-thirds of the patients receive treatment in hospitals managed by private corporations and denominational bodies, the former slightly leading in number of patients on the census dates and markedly in number of admissions. More than one-half of the admissions to institutions are to hospitals.

The permanent homes form a singular exception, inasmuch as those designated "public" show percentages of inmates and admissions more than twice as large as those under private and ecclesiastical control combined. When not provided for in almshouses, the aged, incurable, and other needy persons who make up the bulk of the population of the permanent homes are generally supposed to be cared for by private institutions or organizations. The contrary fact to be deduced from Table iv is attributable to the extensive provisions for this class made in a few states, and will receive further explanation in the analysis of the permanent homes, by states. The stability of the population in the permanent homes is indicated by the percentage of admissions, which is but 1.4 of the total number of admissions to all institutions, while a little more than 27 per cent of all inmates are to be found in them at a given time.

The difference between the percentage of inmates in public temporary homes and the percentage of those in private and ecclesiastical institutions of this class, and the disproportionate number of admissions to the public institutions, are explained by the fact that most of the latter are municipal lodging houses that are practically without inmates who remain longer than a night. The varying activities of institutions grouped as temporary homes also account for the circumstance that the population of the homes under ecclesiastical control appears to be more stable than that of the same class of homes under private management.

Institutional provisions for the deaf and blind, being chiefly of an educational nature, are naturally for the greater part of public origin. The public institutions for the deaf and blind contain more than 70 per cent of the inmates of all such institutions, and show more than 86 per cent of all admissions. The number of deaf and blind under the care of ecclesiastical institutions is almost a negligible quantity. It is true, however, that the deaf and blind under institutional care are far less in number than any of the other classes.

Financial statement for all institutions.—Statements were sought from each institution covering: 1, the amount of annual subsidies from public funds; 2, the amount of income from pay inmates during 1903; and 3, the cost of maintenance during 1903, exclusive of improvements. Entirely satisfactory responses could not always be secured. A total of 43 institutions did not report the amount of annual subsidy from public funds, 225 omitted to give income, if any, from pay inmates, and 241 failed to supply cost of maintenance. The groups of institutions entering into these totals will be shown later. Aside from a not uncommon reluctance on the part of institutions to give even the general facts concerning income and cost, it appears that some institutions actually keep no adequate records, while others depend chiefly upon donations of all kinds, the value of which is not easily translatable into dollars and cents. It must not be understood, however, that the absence of statements greatly influences the totals indicated in Table II. As a matter of fact, most of the institutions from which financial statements are lacking are among the smallest of their kind. For general purposes the statistics of the extent to which institutions are subsidized out of public treasuries may be considered complete. The total showing the amount of income from pay inmates would not have been materially increased by the addition of details for the 225 institutions for which returns are missing, as many of these institutions receive no revenue whatever from that source, and still others do not appear to regard it as a factor of consequence. The cost of maintenance as given is probably an understatement of from $200,000 to $500,000.

For the whole of the United States the gross cost of maintaining benevolent institutions in 1903, exclusive of improvements, was, according to Table II, $55,577,633, or, excepting the cost of institutions for the deaf and blind (Table III), $52,053,950. Deducting the income from pay inmates, the cost of maintenance was $40,729,125, and, exclusive of institutions for the deaf and blind, $37,806,135.

The above gross cost of maintaining all benevolent institutions entailed a per capita expenditure of $0.70 for the United States.

Arranged in the order of per capita cost, the following order of states and territories, exclusive of the District of Columbia, is obtained:

States and territories ranked according to per capita cost of maintenance of benevolent institutions: 1903.

In many states there is a close relation between the gross cost per capita of maintaining benevolent institutions and the ratio of inmates to 100,000 of population contained in them. Excluding the District of Columbia, the following states hold exactly the same rank both as to per capita cost and ratio of inmates: California, New York, Colorado, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Illinois, Nebraska, and South Carolina, while in numerous instances there is a difference of but a point or two. In some apparent exceptions it will be found that the balance is restored when cost of maintenance is compared with ratio of admissions to population. Yet in other cases the relation under consideration is somewhat remote.

A presentation, by states, of the cost of maintenance for each inmate of institutions on the census dates or for each person admitted (a combination of the two being out of the question) would tend to misleading comparisons. It is suggestive, however, to note that the annual expenditure per inmate on the basis of the number remaining in institutions on December 31, 1904, appears to run from $489.50 in Arizona to $100.20 in Mississippi, where it is lowest. Corresponding figures for some other states make the rate for New Mexico, $418.46; Montana, $384.34; Massachusetts, $307.31; Wyoming, $280.88; North Dakota, $265.44; Nevada, $257.14; Connecticut, $250.44; Pennsylvania, $240; and New York, which occupies thirteenth place in point of cost, $228.55. It is perfectly natural that a high rate of cost should be chiefly characteristic of the newer Western states.

There is no uniform correspondence between the gross expenditures for benevolent institutions and the rank a state occupies in point of population, as may be gathered from the following exhibit of 22 states, each of which contributed more than half a million dollars for the support of such institutions during 1903:

Of the aggregate cost of maintenance 29.3 per cent was expended for public institutions, 43.5 per cent for private institutions, and 27.2 per cent for ecclesiastical institutions. These per cents remain nearly the same when the institutions for the deaf and blind are excluded.

Delaware is the only state that does not support a public institution of any character besides the almshouses and hospitals for the insane. The fact that the amount of public moneys voted for institutional purposes in some states exceeds the total expenditures for private and ecclesiastical institutions may indicate a paucity of conveniences of this character, as in the case of Arkansas, Mississippi, Oklahoma, and Tennessee, or that the state undertakes special functions which elsewhere are left to private enterprise, as in the case of Indiana, Ohio, Kansas, and Wisconsin. In 17 states, including some in which benevolent institutional work has attained its largest development, the expenditures for the maintenance of private institutions are larger than those for public institutions.

On the other hand, the aggregate cost of ecclesiastical institutions is larger than that of institutions under private management in the following 20 states and territories: Alabama, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Washington, and Wisconsin.

Annual subsidies to benevolent institutions from public funds.—In all of the states and territories, except Idaho, Nevada, and Oklahoma, part of the cost of private and ecclesiastical institutions is defrayed from public funds. Frequently contributions are made by the local community, or subsidies are voted by the legislatures. Both methods of subsidies involve a recognition of the fundamental duty of the community to provide institutional care for its sick and dependent members, but also indicate, in a more or less pronounced manner, a preference for a vicarious performance of this duty. Tables VII and VIII show the amount of annual subsidies from public funds given to private and to ecclesiastical institutions inclusive and exclusive, respectively, of those devoted to the deaf and blind. The sums, no doubt, vary considerably year by year, but the period investigated is sufficiently representative for purposes of comparison.

In proportion to the aggregate cost of maintenance the ecclesiastical institutions receive a larger share of public bounty than the private; and in 10 states, namely, Alabama, California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, New Mexico, New York, South Carolina, Texas, and Wisconsin, the former get the larger part of the actual amount of subsidies.

A clearer view of the relation of expenditures to subsidies is presented in the following statement:

The differing policies in the states with reference to annual payments out of public funds to private and to ecclesiastical institutions do not conform generally to the extent of institutional operations, in the sense that dependence upon this form of income is greatest where the pressure upon these charities appears to be greatest. There are some notable exceptions, for instance, New York, Maryland, Connecticut, Indiana, and Pennsylvania. In each of these states the percentage of total cost of maintenance derived from public funds is from 19.2 upward. On the other hand, states like Massachusetts, Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, Michigan, Colorado, Minnesota, etc., each of which has an extensively developed system of institutions, get only from 1.1 to 5.0 per cent of the cost of maintenance from public treasuries. To facilitate comparisons the states and territories have been arranged in the following statement in the order of the percentages of cost of maintenance derived from public funds:

For the whole of the United States 26.7 per cent of the aggregate cost of maintenance in 1903 was covered by income from pay cases. Of the total amount received from this source ($14,848,508) 3.5 per cent was reported from public institutions, 51.7 per cent from private, and 44.8 per cent from ecclesiastical institutions. In proportion to the cost of maintenance the income from inmates was considerably larger in ecclesiastical institutions than in private, a fact which must be attributed to the numerous hospitals under church patronage that are largely maintained by the revenue from patients.

There is only one state without a public benevolent institution, but as shown in Table IX, in 15 states there is no income whatsoever from inmates of public institutions. The explanation is that these states provide institutions at public cost only for the deaf and blind, to whom support and education as a rule are given gratis. In fact, less than one-fifth of the income from pay cases received at public institutions is secured by all the public institutions for the deaf and blind.

The fact that the income from pay inmates of the public institutions of Massachusetts is much more than twice as large as that of any other state, and forms 30.1 per cent of the total for the United States, must be ascribed chiefly to the public hospitals in this commonwealth and the legal provisions made for the recovery of the cost of maintenance of indigent patients from the city or town in which they have a domicile.

As regards both private and ecclesiastical institutions, the hospitals report most of the income from pay cases. It will be observed that among the states in which denominational institutions obtain a larger share of income from pay cases than those designated as private the following are conspicuous: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Illinois, Montana, New Jersey, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington, and Wisconsin. The large total given for Illinois ceases to be surprising when it is known that this state exceeds even New York in the number of hospitals under church management and has twice as many as any other state.

Summary of financial statement for all institutions, by classes.—Table XI gives totals and percentages of aggregate cost of maintenance, annual subsidies from public funds, and income from pay cases for all public, private, and ecclesiastical institutions, by classes of institutions.

The hospital class leads as to aggregate cost, a little more than one-half of the entire sum expended for the maintenance of benevolent institutions being for the benefit of the sick in hospitals. Of the total amount of annual subsidies, hospitals receive 37.4 per cent, and 82 per cent of the entire income of institutions from pay inmates falls to the share of this class. In proportion to their activities, private hospitals receive a much heavier donation from public treasuries than hospitals under denominational management. On the other hand, in proportion to the aggregate cost of maintenance the ecclesiastical hospitals receive a greater income from pay patients than the private hospitals.

Of the total cost of maintenance, 18.1 per cent was expended for the support of orphanages. Of the millions of dollars annually expended for the cost and education of orphans and otherwise dependent children, 44.7 per cent goes to the maintenance of those in institutions under ecclesiastical control which, it should be observed, also obtain proportionately a much larger share of the annual subsidies, and also a relatively larger income from inmates who pay something for their support.

The third place in percentage of aggregate cost of maintenance is occupied by the permanent homes, which are supported at an annual cost of nearly ten million dollars, or only a very little less than the cost of all orphanages and children's homes. In proportion to the number of inmates cared for, the permanent homes are the most expensive of all institutions, a fact which is probably due partly to the character of the inmates and more especially to the circumstance that such a large group of these institutions is maintained at public cost. Only 3.1 per cent of the total annual subsidies is given to the permanent homes, and more than two-thirds of the amount was secured by private homes. The latter also show a larger percentage of income from pay inmates than the public and ecclesiastical. It should be remarked, however, that the tables include not a few institutions having a fixed entrance fee. This is notably true of some homes for the aged.

Considering the number of persons cared for in the course of a year, the cost of supporting temporary homes is small, being but 5.5 per cent of the aggregate for all institutions. As is well known, in many temporary homes the inmates receive board and lodging in return for doing various kinds of work, not a little of which results in income, but not of the kind that can easily be put into terms of money, and for this reason the income from pay inmates appears smaller than it actually is. The temporary homes receive in cash from inmates only 3.5 per cent of the aggregate for all institutions. The proportionately very large percentage given to ecclesiastical institutions of the annual subsidies received by temporary homes is perhaps to be explained by the fact that the ecclesiastical homes care for groups of unfortunates for whom not only the most effective appeal can be made, but who are in need of special influences that can not so easily be supplied by public institutions.

A little more than three and one-half million dollars is annually devoted to the care of the deaf and blind in institutions, or 6.3 per cent of the total expended for all institutions. Except as they are found in almshouses and other special institutions, the deaf and blind are in many states exclusively, and in most states for the greater part, cared for at public cost. Ecclesiastical charity enters this field only to a very limited extent, and private institutions for the deaf and blind, although comparatively extensive in operations, are in numerous instances maintained only in the absence of provisions of a public character. For this reason, presumably, the private institutions for the deaf and blind succeed in obtaining more than one-half of their cost of maintenance from public grants.

Although the cost of maintaining day nurseries is insignificant when compared with the other classes of institutions, the total expended for them in the year aggregates $327,659. This class of establishments is also made a beneficiary through public subsidies, but probably without exception these subsidies are contributions from the communities in which the nurseries are located.

The actual cost of maintaining dispensaries is no doubt somewhat understated, because of the fact that many hospitals maintain out-patient departments, the cost of which is included in the general cost. The entire amount of public subsidies, namely, $23,501, voted to this class of institutions goes to those under private control.

About one-fourth of all the benevolent institutions in the United States are devoted to the care of orphans or other dependent children. Private and ecclesiastical bodies each control 478 establishments, and but 119 of the total are directly under public management. In making comparisons it should be remembered that the details in regard to orphanages in the different states are more or less influenced by the prevailing policy regarding the care of children. If the institutional policy is general, the number of institutions and inmates, cost of maintenance, etc., will be proportionately greater than in a state following a noninstitutional policy. In order to supply a perfect statistical picture of the care of dependent children, it would be necessary to account for all those placed in families without passing through institutions; but to do so was not within the province of this investigation. The state of Iowa may be taken as an example. It has but 12 orphanages, while New Jersey, with a smaller population, supports nearly four times as many. Obviously it would be a mistake to conclude that the apparent lack of institutional provisions in Iowa indicates that the dependent children in this state are relatively so few, or that they are inadequately cared for. The explanation lies in the difference of method. Several other striking contrasts of the same nature between states are furnished by Table XII.

In many instances the actual number of children's institutions in a state is closely related to the number of its inhabitants; but there are significant exceptions, which suggest in some cases lack of adequate provision for dependent children, and in others that they are largely cared for outside of institutions.

Indiana and Ohio are the only states having systems of county homes for children. As a result they are credited with nearly three-fourths of the children's homes maintained at public cost. Twenty-six states are without any public homes for children. In the following 22 states and territories the children's institutions under church management exceed in number those controlled by private secular corporations: Alabama, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, Virginia, and Wisconsin. Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming are as yet without any orphanages.

Inmates.—It is of interest to compare the number of admissions to orphanages and children's homes during a year with the number of inmates on the census dates; in all cases where the former is larger, it is generally safe to infer that proportionate efforts are made to distribute children in homes, and vice versa.

In order to facilitate comparison the states and territories have been arranged according to the number of admissions to children's institutions in 1904, and the number remaining at the end of 1904, as follows:

From the figures given it is already clear that whether considered by the number of inmates of orphanages on the given date or the number of admissions to them during the year, the totals bear no definite ratio to the population. This becomes much more apparent when the states are placed in the order of number of inmates and of admissions to each 100,000 of general population, as shown in the next table:

States and territories ranked according to number of inmates of orphanages and children's homes on December 31, 1904, per 100,000 of population, and also according to number of persons admitted during 1904 per 100,000 of population.

In many instances high ratios, both of inmates and of admissions to population, are traceable to the elaborate institutional provisions made for children. In other cases low ratios denote limited facilities in the shape of orphanages and homes rather than a proportionately small number of dependent children in the community. But in still other instances the ratios shown are directly affected by the extent of the prevailing home finding for children in contradistinction to purely institutional efforts. At the present time there is no means of determining just what certain ratios signify so far as some of the states doing the most enlightened work with children are concerned. Many of the ratios are modified by such important factors as urban population, climatic conditions, etc., which can not be considered until more complete data are available.

Sex of inmates.—Some institutions failed to report both inmates and admissions by sex, and the totals, therefore, are somewhat larger in each instance than the sums for males and females. This does not materially disturb the proportion of the sexes. A large majority of the inmates of institutions on the two dates under consideration were males. The record of admissions shows the same preponderance of male children. When single states are considered it will be observed that the proportion of the sexes is practically the same in all states dealing with large numbers of dependent children. The occasional preponderance of female orphans and dependents is to be ascribed to the existence of large institutions which receive only girls.

Cost of maintenance.—Reports of expenditures are lacking for 36 institutions. The total of $10,050,587, therefore, does not represent the entire cost of maintenance of children's institutions, although those not reporting are among the smallest ones. Moreover, hundreds of orphanages are in constant receipt of donations of all kinds, the money value of which can not even be estimated. A closer view of the relative amounts spent for children's institutions in the various states and territories is obtained from the table below. On the whole, the expenditures seem to be in fairly close correspondence to the number of inmates and admissions.

Subsidies from public funds.—The amount contributed from public sources to children's institutions in 1903 was $2,181,784, or 21.7 per cent of the total cost of maintenance. In Delaware, Mississippi, Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Dakota, and Utah no help of this kind was given. It is evident from the small amount of subsidies noted for some states that the contributions are of a local character; that is, they are payments made by the county, town, or municipality in return for care of children who are public charges. In other cases the amounts are grants from the public treasury in lump sums. In illustration of the different policies observed in regard to appropriating money for benevolent work for children, statistics for a few states may be cited:

Cost of maintenance of orphanages and children's homes, amount of subsidies to them from public funds, and per cent such subsidies form of total cost, for specified states: 1903.

In two of the states referred to above, namely, California and New York, more than one-half of the cost of maintaining children's institutions is paid out of the taxes, while in other states subsidies are almost entirely unknown and never voted by legislatures for the benefit of institutions not exclusively supported by the states.

Income from pay inmates.—A little more than one-tenth of the entire cost of maintaining orphanages and children's homes is covered by income from pay inmates who contribute annually about one million dollars. It is not known what part of this income is contributed by relatives or friends of the children, and what part from public authorities who pay stipulated sums per week or month for the support of those who have become direct charges upon the community. In proportion to expenditures the amounts collected from inmates are smallest in the Southern and some of the newer Western states.

The amount of income from pay inmates in children's institutions, together with the percentage it forms of the total cost of maintenance, is shown below for some of the states which receive the largest sums from this source:

Income from pay inmates of orphanages and children's homes and per cent of cost of maintenance covered by such income, for specified states: 1903.

New York	243, 964	8.7
Pennsylvania	74, 256	5.2

Adding together the amounts of total subsidies and of total income from pay inmates it is found that the sum equals 40 per cent of the total cost of maintenance.

Paid employees to the number of 9,477 were engaged in the care of children in institutions. Of the large number of persons giving service without remuneration there is no count.

DAY NURSERIES.

Table XIII gives, by states and territories, a summary of the details presented for this class of institutions in Table 1, with the number designated as private and as ecclesiastical. There are no public institutions of this class.

This form of benevolence as yet occurs chiefly in a few Eastern states with large urban population, and is not found in 26 states. Of the 166 day nurseries accounted for in the table no less than 113 are maintained in four states—Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. Thirty of the entire number are under church auspices and 136 are maintained by private organizations or individuals.

The figures obtained in regard to inmates are perhaps somewhat vague, owing to the apparently slight efforts made at record keeping in some nurseries. The total number reported as inmates on January 1, 1904, was 7,441, of which approximately one-half were in institutions in the state of New York. On December 31 of the same year there was an increase in attendance of 176, which is an understatement, for a large number of institutions failed to report this detail.

Of the total cost of maintenance in 1903 ($327,659) considerably more than one-half was disbursed for the support of the day nurseries in Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. Of these states New Jersey is the only one in which day nurseries received assistance from the state, the other notable beneficiaries being in Maryland and Tennessee. The total state grants amounted to $7,675. Generally subsidies under this head must be understood as coming from the local community.

With some exceptions, it appears to be the general custom for parents or friends to make small payments for the care given children in the nurseries. The total amount designated as income was $47,175, and would go but a small way toward paying cost of maintenance.

To attend to the wants of the children the services of 680 paid employees were required.

HOSPITALS.

Table XIV gives, by states and territories, a summary of the details presented for this class of institutions in Table 2, with the number designated as public, private, and ecclesiastical, and the number of patients on December 31, 1904, and persons admitted during the year, per 100,000 of population.

As there were excluded from this report, so far as it was possible to distinguish them, all institutions conducted for private profit, it follows that the number of hospitals given for any community represents only those of a distinctly benevolent character and does not indicate the whole extent of existing hospital facilities. Thus Nevada is the only state not credited with a hospital, but presumably the need of hospitals for her small population is met by private enterprises not to be classed as benevolent.

Specific conclusions drawn from the number of hospitals in different states in proportion to population would be meaningless so long as it is impracticable to bring single institutions and their operations into comparison. Clearly one hospital in a community may perform with even better success the work divided among three or more small institutions elsewhere. Yet the extent of the provisions made for the sick, as manifested by the number of hospitals, points not merely to the stress of life under urban conditions and the like, but to progress in humanitarian work. The table compels the inference that hospital facilities in many instances are not apportioned among states in accordance with needs, but reflect the extent of charitable enterprise.

Attention has been drawn already to the fact that some communities prefer to subsidize hospitals operated as private enterprises rather than to establish institutions of their own. This accounts for the proportionately small number of hospitals designated as public. Delaware, Idaho, Indian Territory, Kansas, Nevada, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Vermont are without them and in other states they are represented chiefly by Federal institutions. The private hospitals outnumber the public by nearly four to one, and the ecclesiastical, the public by two to one. Although the hospitals under private management are about twice as numerous for the whole country as those under church control, the latter are in the majority in the following states: Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Montana, Washington, and Wisconsin. In all the Eastern states the conditions are reversed, but this must not be understood to signify less activity on the part of the churches; the charity simply does not take denominational form to as great an extent.

Number of patients.—It has already been noted that the movement of population in hospitals is of somewhat larger proportions than indicated by the totals in Table xiv. Forty-one hospitals did not make any return for the number of patients on hand January 1, 1904; twice as many failed to report admissions during the year, and even a greater number did not state how many patients remained at the end of 1904. Although the hospitals from which complete data could not be secured through any means within the reach of the Bureau of the Census are among the smallest, it is evident that a perfect enumeration would have disclosed a larger gain in patients during twelve months, and that the admissions are understated probably by a few thousand. Nevertheless, the totals in question give an adequate picture of the benevolent work of hospitals, and indicate that at the two dates there were in the United States about 87 patients in hospitals to each 100,000 of population, while in the same number of inhabitants more than 1,300 were persons admitted to hospitals during twelve months. These figures would, of course, receive substantial additions were all patients accounted for who frequent hospitals not supported through benevolence in some form. Yet the ratios per population would probably not be materially increased, for the hospitals not enumerated are almost exclusively given over to the care of the comparatively few rich or well-to-do.

The relation between the number of hospitals in the different states and the extent of the facilities they provide will be more easily comprehended if the states are arranged in order of the number of admissions during 1904 and number of patients remaining on December 31, 1904, together with the number of hospitals, as follows:

Without consulting the tabular presentation of individual institutions, it is apparent not only that many hospitals are very limited in facilities, but also that the number of hospitals in a state gives little indication of the extent of institutional operations. For example,

Iowa has four times as many hospitals as Louisiana, or 41 against the latter's 10, yet, both as to number of admissions in a year and the number of patients to be found at any given time, the hospital work of Louisiana is on a larger scale.

The differences in the number of admissions to hospitals per 100,000 of population may point to a variety of unknown factors which prevent exact comparisons. In the general view, however, a wide discrepancy in ratios of admissions must be taken to indicate the extent and sufficiency of hospital facilities, and not that climatic conditions, the distribution of population, the presence of epidemics, etc., cause an unusual amount of sickness in some states as compared with others. In other words, the ratios of admissions to population furnish the best available means of estimating what the number of hospitals found in a state mean to it. The fact that of two states very similar as to general conditions one shows a ratio of admissions twice as large as the other may be taken in most cases to mean that in the one hospital facilities are proportionately more ample. What has been said of admissions is also true of the number found in hospitals at any time. No comparisons between states are attempted; but in the following table the states are ranked according to number of persons admitted to hospitals in 1904, and also according to number of persons remaining December 31, 1904, in each 100,000 of population:

States and territories ranked according to number of persons admitted to hospitals during 1904 per 100,000 of population, and also according to number of patients on December 31, 1904, per 100,000 of population.

Number on medical staff.—All but 15 hospitals made complete returns in regard to the number on resident medical staff. There were 2,863 resident physicians, divided among 1,478 hospitals. Less satisfactory answers were given to the inquiry about the visiting medical staff. In the case of many small institutions practically every reputable physician of the locality is considered as belonging to the visiting staff. The total of 15,914 given for the United States is therefore a number without exact significance, but serves to indicate the army of physicians more or less regularly engaged in looking after patients in hospitals of the benevolent order.

Number of nurses and training schools for nurses.—In all 21,844 nurses were found employed in the care of patients at 1,484 hospitals, there being 9 which failed to report this item. Doubtless in some instances the term "nurse" merely stands for a more or less trained attendant. What proportion the whole number of nurses regularly educated for their duties bears to the whole number employed it is impossible to say; but it is significant that more than one-half of the hospitals, or 867, report that they conduct training schools for nurses. In addition to these training schools there are some under the supervision of various religious sisterhoods.

Cost of maintenance.—Of the considerable number of hospitals which neglected to state the cost of maintenance in 1903, or for peculiar reasons found themselves unable to do so, nearly all are comparatively small institutions. The total given for the whole country, $28,200,869, is therefore approximately correct.

As shown in Table XI, 22.6 per cent of the gross cost of maintenance was expended for the hospitals classed as public institutions. The cost of the private and ecclesiastical reached a total of $21,594,784. Deducting for both these classes the amounts of income from pay patients and the annual grants from public funds, the sum which was raised through some other form of benevolence than appropriations from taxes was $7,580,504. Many hospitals receive substantial aid through donations in kind, which diminish the need of cash outlay. The value of these gifts can not be estimated.

In all cases the returns of cost are exclusive of improvements.

How unequally the burden of supporting hospitals is distributed among the states is apparent from the next table, showing the cost of maintenance for each state and territory, in the order of the amounts expended during 1903:

The first 6 states contain about 35 per cent of the total population of the country, yet contribute about two-thirds of the cost of maintaining hospitals, or over eighteen million dollars, while the group of 21 states (including the District of Columbia) beginning with Connecticut and ending with New Hampshire, which contains almost exactly the same percentage of inhabitants as the first 6, spends for this purpose less than six millions, or a little more than a fifth of the entire cost for the United States. The 5 states, Missouri, New Jersey, Maryland, Minnesota, and Michigan, although containing but 13.6 per cent of the population, expend $3,698,224 for the support of hospitals, while the 17 states beginning with North Carolina and ending with Oklahoma have 15.5 per cent of the total population and gave but $898,419 for the support of hospitals.

These financial comparisons indicate the conditions necessitating extensive hospital facilities rather than the advance in benevolent enterprises, though the latter is more generally a concomitant of settled and prosperous community life.

Subsidies from public funds.—The total amount received by hospitals from this source was $2,276,336, which equals 18.1 per cent of the cost of maintenance in 1903. The hospitals in the following states and territories were not aided by payments from taxes: California, Idaho, Indian Territory, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Utah. Elsewhere the subsidies run from $340 in Wyoming to $725,554 in Pennsylvania, and cover percentages of cost varying from 0.5 per cent in Minnesota to 24.5 per cent in North Carolina and 33.4 per cent in the District of Columbia. Other states having institutions receiving notable amounts are Georgia, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Alabama, Maryland, Rhode Island, Maine, New Jersey, Arizona, and New York. Institutions in 29 states are helped through subsidies to the extent of less than 8 per cent of the cost of maintenance, as may be gathered from the subjoined table, giving the amounts granted by each state or territory, together with the percentages they form of expenditures:

Income from pay patients.—The total sum received by hospitals in payment for care of patients was $12,181,484, which forms 43.2 per cent of the cost of maintenance. In 24 states, including some doing the largest hospital work, as New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Ohio, etc., such income covers less than 50 per cent of the cost of maintenance; in 19 states it equals from 50 to 80 per cent of the cost of maintenance; in Indian Territory, Nebraska, North Dakota, and Oklahoma it was, respectively, 94.1, 89.3, 96.5, and 82.9 per cent of the cost; and in Utah and Oregon the income actually exceeded the cost, the percentages being 116.2 and 109.7, all of which is exhibited in the following table:

There is an apparent contradiction in describing hospitals as benevolent institutions when the amount of money they receive from pay patients is equal to or in excess of the cost of maintenance; but, in general, it should be remembered that to a very large extent the moneys termed income do not represent the personal contributions of the patients or their relatives and friends, but the amounts collected from the public authorities legally responsible for their support. Furthermore, the cost of maintenance as given does not include improvements or general equipment. A hospital may receive income, on account of patients, equal to or larger than the bare cost of running it, yet deserve the appellation "benevolent," because it owes its existence to generous endowment, and because the services of physicians and attendants are not reckoned among the items of cost.

DISPENSARIES.

Table xv gives, by states and territories, a summary of the details presented for this class of institutions in Table 2, with the number designated as public, private, and ecclesiastical, and the ratio of cases treated in 1904 per 100,000 of mean population.

Although the dispensaries differ from other institutions in the respect that the persons frequenting them are occasional visitors rather than inmates, they are too conspicuous a part of the medical charity to be ignored. If certain out-patient departments of hospitals had been counted as separate institutions, which would have been misleading, the total number of dispensaries would have been augmented. Dispensaries that are mere feeders to hospitals run for profit were excluded.

For 27 states no dispensaries were reported. About two-thirds of the entire number (156) are found in California, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania. In other words, dispensaries as separate institutions are peculiar to large urban centers. Only 11 were maintained at public cost, and 17 were supported by churches, the remainder (128) being under private control.

From 33 dispensaries no statements were obtainable in regard to the number of cases treated during 1904. The total given, 1,611,651, is therefore lower than the actual number, but gives a hint of the magnitude of the practically free medical service obtainable through the dispensaries. On the basis of the above total the number of cases treated in them to 100,000 of population was, for the entire country, 1,982.3. Nowhere has the system of medical dispensaries reached such a development as in the state of New York, or more particularly the city of New York. There the ratio of cases treated to 100,000 inhabitants reached the remarkable figure of 10,848.5, a ratio nearly twice as large as that for any other state.

The medical staff of 151 dispensaries (5 not reporting this item) numbered 2,427.

It cost in 1903 to maintain 148 dispensaries (8 being omitted), $519,620.

From public funds $23,501 were contributed toward the support of this class of institutions by 6 of the 23 states reporting dispensaries.

Under the title "permanent homes" is comprehended a wide variety of benevolent undertakings. There are homes for aged dependents without means and for aged persons who can pay a liberal entrance fee, for persons afflicted with various incurable diseases or otherwise disabled, etc. Some of the homes make few distinctions as to the nature of dependence; others are devoted to a special class. To some only adults are admitted; others receive both adults and children, and are, in fact, permanent homes for adults, with orphanage annexes. A detailed classification of these institutions was not attempted, in view of the incompleteness of the data at hand for this purpose.

Arizona, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah are as yet without any permanent homes for dependents. The 753 whose existence could be traced are pretty evenly distributed among the states, allowing for the necessity of a proportionately large number in the older communities. In proportion to population Massachusetts leads in institutions of this character. Sixty of the permanent homes are reported as maintained by public authorities. Of those under private management (constituting a large majority) some are endowed establishments and a few owe their origin, as well as continued existence, to the munificence of individuals.

The permanent homes under church supervision are outnumbered by those termed private almost two to one, 13 states being without any. The states in which the ecclesiastical institutions of this kind form the majority are Connecticut, Illinois, Minnesota, South Carolina, Washington, and Wisconsin and the District of Columbia.

Number of inmates.—More than three times as many persons were inmates of permanent homes at the beginning and at the end of 1904 as there were persons admitted during that year. The actual gain in population for the twelve months was 1,845, which seems small considering that 29,353 were admitted. Moreover, a large part of the gain is owing to the admission of children, and may also be accounted for partly by the fact that the population is more shifting in some institutions classified as permanent homes than the name would seem to imply (it will be observed that the ratio of admissions to inmates is particularly high in some states), and partly by the naturally high death rate in this group of institutions. It is evident that the number of institutions does not always indicate correctly the extent of their benevolent work. Thus Massachusetts has more than ten times as many permanent homes as Kansas, more than three times as many as Virginia, more than five times as many as Wisconsin, etc.; yet in these three states the numbers both of inmates and of admissions are much larger, owing chiefly to the large public institutions maintained in them, as is shown elsewhere in this report.

Number of inmates and admissions per 100,000 of population.—The populous Federal and state homes are largely responsible for the striking variations in the ratios of inmates on the given date to 100,000 of population. If these were excluded, a much larger share of benevolent work in caring for various groups of dependents would be shown than now appears credited to some states that are foremost in this charity.

The following table shows the rank of the states with reference to the number of inmates and the number of admissions per 100,000 of population:

Sex of inmates.—In all states except Delaware, Florida, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina there is a marked predominance of males among the persons who were inmates of permanent homes on the two dates given. There were also about three times as many males as females admitted to these institutions during 1904, the relation of the sexes in respect to number remaining the same, however, in the states mentioned, excepting Massachusetts; and in Missouri also the females were in the majority of those admitted. West Virginia supports homes for women only. Again, the ample provisions made for the veterans furnishes a far-reaching explanation which, so far as most states are concerned, suffices to explain the predominance of males among persons admitted. Nevertheless it seems probable that outside this class there are more males than females who stand in need of the kind of care obtainable in the various homes.

Cost of maintenance.—It cost $9,916,180 to maintain 752 permanent homes; the returns from one institution not being available. The sum expended in each state is given in the statement below, in the order of the amount:

Subsidies from public funds.—Nineteen of the 44 states and territories supporting permanent homes do not enjoy any part of the $188,077 given to permanent homes from public funds. The entire amount is but 1.9 per cent of the cost of maintenance. Of course, the sums voted to institutions of the public order are not considered as subsidies of the kind under discussion.

The extent of the aid from public sources in the different states and the percentage it forms of the cost of maintenance are presented below:

Income from pay inmates.—The $820,096 collected from pay inmates during the year equals 8.3 per cent of the total cost of maintenance. For the individual states the amounts vary from $252 in Texas to $264,954 in New York. The permanent homes in these 9 states and territories report no income: Alabama, Georgia, Idaho, Indian Territory, Mississippi, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, and Wyoming.

Entrance fees.—In all, 364 of the 753 permanent homes report that they do not exact an entrance fee, though presumably they gladly receive pay from inmates. Two hundred and sixty-two institutions have fixed entrance fees, varying from $24 to $1,560, and showing an average of $258. These are practically all homes for aged persons. To the same category belong 65 institutions having entrance fees with a minimum and maximum rate; $25 to $50 being the lowest, and $2,000 to $2,500 being the highest. Ten homes report different rates for men and women and for couples; one home asks $250 "and property," etc. Finally, 51 institutions have no fixed entrance fee. The amount charged depends upon the circumstances of the applicant. If the 65 institutions having variable rates are charged with the minimum amount in each case, the average for the 327 (262 + 65) institutions would be about $270.

How many institutions are rendered practically self-supporting through entrance fees is not known. There are undoubtedly some homes for the aged whose main assets from the first are the anticipated entrance fees, while in many more instances the homes appear to look to this income to meet only a part of the running expenses. Other homes are fairly well endowed.

The number of permanent homes reporting on the item of entrance fee, classified according to amount of fee, is shown in the following table:

TEMPORARY HOMES.

Table XVII gives, by states and territories, a summary of the details presented for this class of institutions in Table 4, with the number designated as public, private, and ecclesiastical, and the ratios of inmates on December 31, 1904, and of admissions during 1904 per 100,000 of population.

The 449 temporary homes, of which one or more are found in each state and territory except Idaho, Indian Territory, Nevada, New Mexico, South Dakota, and Wyoming, are exceedingly diverse in character. Some are mere overnight shelters for wayfarers, intended for the reception of men only or women with or without children. Others are in the nature of general rescue homes for all classes of unfortunates. Still others have as their peculiar mission the reclamation of wayward girls and fallen women. Some are on the border line between rescue homes and lodging houses under benevolent auspices, but to some extent self-sustaining, having at least the distinct purpose of providing a safe haven for homeless persons of scant or no means and for penniless strangers. A large number of establishments were originally listed which, upon further examination, proved to be nothing more than boarding houses for self-supporting wage-earners and were, therefore, omitted. Some of them unquestionably owe their inception to benevolent impulse, but others are open to the suspicion of being run for profit under the guise of charity.

On account of the insufficient data at hand in many instances a classification in detail of the temporary homes was not attempted.

The need of institutions of the character described being largest in the densely populated centers, it follows as a matter of course that the states with the largest urban communities should have a majority of them. In fact, 269 of the total number, or nearly two-thirds, are found in the following states: California, Illinois, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

Only 9 temporary homes are designated as public and 145 as being under church management. Most of them are undertakings of private associations or corporations. Adults alone are received by 175 homes and both adults and children by 259.

Number of inmates.—How truly the institutions under consideration deserve to be called temporary homes is evident from the extraordinary movement of their population. In other words, for every inmate found on January 1, 1904, there were 33 admitted during the year. With a single exception—namely, Delaware—the admissions exceed the number on hand on the dates given. The rate of admission is largest in New Jersey in proportion both to the population of the state and to the number of homes. In most states with a large number of homes the preponderance of admissions over number of inmates present on the first and last days of 1904 is striking. California, with her 15 temporary homes, forms a notable exception, as the total number of persons admitted is not much in excess of the number of inmates at the beginning and at the end of the year.

The total admissions are shown below for the states, including the District of Columbia, having more than 500 admissions to temporary homes in 1904. Of the remaining states 19 had less than 500 admissions; from 1 no report is at hand; and 6, so far as could be ascertained, are without any temporary homes. It is thus evident that very many institutions are of limited capacity. The number of inmates on hand on a given date is not a safe criterion, because so many institutions offer shelter practically only overnight.

Specified states ranked according to number of persons admitted to temporary homes during 1904.

Ratios of inmates and admissions to population.—A further view of the extent and kind of activities exercised by the temporary homes is afforded in the next table, in which the states are ranked in descending order of such ratios. The number of admissions to 100,000 inhabitants fluctuates from 4.1 in North Carolina to 10,011.1 in New Jersey. In 24 states the number is less than 100; in but 6, exclusive of the District of Columbia, does it exceed 1,000. The ratio of inmates on December 31, 1904, to population shows much less violent fluctuations when one excepts the District of Columbia.

States and territories ranked according to number of persons admitted to temporary homes during 1904 per 100,000 of population, and also according to number of inmates on December 31, 1904, per 100,000 of population.

Sex of inmates.—As in the case of the permanent homes, those classified as temporary show a preponderance of males over females both when number of inmates and number of admissions are examined, except, of course, in states where the institutions are exclusively for females, which appears to be true of the following 19 states and territories: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Montana, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma,

South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia. The sex of the children in temporary homes could not be ascertained. Allowing for the institutions not specifying the number of children received, if any, it is apparent that there are lodged at any time in temporary homes from 7,000 to 8,000 children, and that 23,000 children and upward are admitted to them in the course of twelve months.

Cost of maintenance.—No definite statement of cost was obtainable from 24 out of the 449 temporary homes. The missing items relate to the least extensive institutions and would not have helped materially to swell the total for the United States of $3,039,035. Of this amount the five states, New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Ohio, contribute more than two-thirds, and New York alone as much as the other four states mentioned, and California, New Jersey, and Michigan combined. The cost of maintenance for the states in the order of the amounts expended during 1904 follows:

Subsidies from public funds.—The total sum received by temporary homes in the form of grants from state and local taxes was $527,081, or 17.3 per cent of the entire cost of maintenance in 1903. Each state except Arizona, Delaware, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin obtained shares varying from $200 in Texas to $419,914 in New York. Besides New York, which got 79.7 per cent of the total subsidies, other notable beneficiaries were in California and Pennsylvania.

Presumably in most states the subsidies are given by the local community and not by the state.

The sums given to temporary homes in each state and the percentage they form of the cost of maintenance follow:

Income from pay inmates.—In not a single state are the temporary homes self-supporting. The income from pay inmates was almost exactly equal to the amount of subsidies, namely, $526,055, or 17.3 per cent of the cost of maintenance. Most of the income was secured by institutions making a charge for maintenance at fixed or variable weekly rates, as will presently be shown. This does not mean, however, that even where charges are fixed, generous exceptions are not made in favor of persons without means, or that most of the inmates are not direct beneficiaries of the institutions.

The succeeding table gives income from pay inmates, by states, together with the percentage it forms of cost of maintenance:

Income from pay inmates of temporary homes and per cent of cost of maintenance covered by such income, for specified states and territories: 1903.

Charges for maintenance.—Of the 449 temporary homes 278 report that they do not exact payment from inmates; 76 have a fixed rate per week, varying from 50 cents to $10, or an average of $2.63; 34 have variable rates, the lowest running from 60 to 90 cents per week, and the highest from $3 to $40; 57 make some charge where the inmate is able to pay, but not at stipulated rates; 1 institution did not report, and in 3 states the charges are nominal.

If the 34 institutions having variable rates are charged with the minimum amount in each case, the average for the 110 institutions having fixed or variable rates would be about $2.60.

In explanation of the high maximum charges made in a very few institutions, which make it seem doubtful whether they really deserve to be called benevolent, it may be said that they harbor now and then unusual cases requiring a great deal of care and attention, and that the opportunity to obtain such sums is exceptional.

The number of institutions reporting on the item of weekly charges for maintenance and the range of the rates are shown in the following table:

The specific reasons which lead to the inclusion of schools and homes for the deaf and blind among benevolent institutions were stated in the introductory remarks. Although it must be freely conceded that about all the public establishments for the deaf and blind are parts of the public school system of their respective states, this is not true of those under private or ecclesiastical management, which together number not far from one-half of the total. The primary purpose of the latter may also be educational. In all three classes of institutions it is true that the pupils or inmates are recipients of a benevolence not extended to the more fortunate members of society. This, however, is not equivalent to declaring them objects of charity.

The following 8 states and territories are without special institutions for the deaf and blind: Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Vermont, and Wyoming. Most states and territories have adopted the policy of making separate provisions for these special classes, affording both education and institutional care at public cost. The exceptions are Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Indian Territory, and Massachusetts, in which institutions under private control supply wholly the needs in the case. The 34 institutions of that class are found in the states mentioned and in Maryland, Missouri, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. Only 15 are maintained by church bodies, and these are in California, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Wisconsin, no less than 5 of them being in New York. Day schools for the deaf and blind are not included.

Number of inmates.—The total number of inmates found on January 1, 1904, was 15,153, which at the end of the year had been reduced by 422. The number of persons admitted during 1904 amounted to 7,025, or less than one-half as many as were in institutions at the beginning or at the end of the year.

The following table shows that as regards this class of institutions there is no definite ratio between the population of a state and the number of inmates on the census dates or the number of persons admitted during the year:

Although New York has many institutions of the kind under consideration and an enormous population, she stands twenty-sixth among the states in the ratio of admissions to schools and homes for the deaf and blind per 100,000 inhabitants. Or, to put it differently, the ratio of admissions is five times as large in Tennessee, and four and one-half times in Texas, South Dakota, and West Virginia. On the whole, the ratio of admissions seems generally at variance with the facts observed in regard to admissions to other classes of institutions in the different states. The high number of admissions in some of the Southern states is a striking feature of which the available data afford no reasonable explanation. In general, however, it may be stated that unusual rates of admissions to institutions for the deaf and blind can not be attributed to the establishment of new institutions, for only one of this class was opened in the year preceding the census inquiry. What has been said about the ratio of admissions is largely true of the ratio of inmates on the census dates to 100,000 of population. Here, also, some Southern states come markedly to the fore with ratios surpassing those of the Middle states and of several of the North Atlantic group.

Sex of inmates.—The preponderance of males is slight, but holds true in regard to the whole number of inmates on both the dates given as well as in regard to the number of admissions. With some unimportant variations the same relation of the sexes is observable when the figures for the single states are examined, although the excess of males is less marked among the persons admitted during the year.

Cost of maintenance.—Of the total cost of maintenance of $3,523,683, about 65 per cent was expended in the maintenance of the public institutions. The cost of the private institutions forms 29.7 per cent of the whole, and that of the ecclesiastical but 4.6 per cent. Relative to population and the amounts devoted to other forms of benevolence, the outlay on behalf of the deaf and blind is noticeably large in some of the Southern states, as will be seen from the following schedule of cost in the order of the amounts given in each state and territory:

Subsidies from public funds.—A total of $884,772 was distributed among private and ecclesiastical institutions of five states and the District of Columbia.

The amount given to each and the percentage it makes of the total cost are shown below:

Annual subsidies from public funds to schools and homes for the deaf and blind, and per cent of cost of maintenance covered by such subsidies, for specified states and territories: 1903.

Massachusetts	74,553	49.9
District of Columbia	74,100	88.2
Connecticut	54,812	68.6
Maryland	22,187	33.5

California, Illinois, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Indian Territory, all of which have private or ecclesiastical schools and homes for the deaf and blind, did not grant subsidies to them.

Income from pay inmates.—This was $100,693 for the whole country, of which but $18,631 were received by public institutions. Those under private management obtained 71.5 per cent of the whole amount, and the ecclesiastical 10 per cent.

The total cost of maintenance of private and ecclesiastical institutions was $1,209,769. At the same time they had a revenue from subsidies and payments by inmates of $966,834, leaving an amount of $242,935 to be raised in other ways. The burden of this fell, of course, chiefly upon institutions in the states not granting subsidies.

All told, the institutions of 20 states had more or less income from inmates, as shown below, together with the amounts and percentages of total cost. The 22 states showing no income maintain schools and homes for the deaf and blind exclusively at public cost.
